I have been working in the IT industry for a while now and have recently taken up a new contract as a Software Developer for a university. The pay is nice but I am worried about the region being Adelaide. I am going to school to be a developer and then probably have to go out into industry to find employment. I have noticed that the IT industry is moving to be a technical service industry and there is little need for in-house code writers. It seems that there are many people going into it and if there is something easy to get a job in then this might be a good option but I am worried about the pay and hours

What's New in the PrintDirect ActiveX?

This is a 32-bit component for Win32 that runs in 'out-of-process' mode and as such can be used from any 32 bit application. PrintDirect ActiveX has a similar functionality to the ClientAPI32.DLL but is much more comprehensive. It is intended to be used to control a network printer or local printer connected to the same computer as the control application. It provides all of the common printing related functions of the client API and adds many more. This component can also be used from a non-visual 32 bit application that needs to send data to a printer. Some good examples of this are: searching a file system for a printer and adding new printers. Capabilities: Print file, Linefeed, Lprint, Formfeed, LprintEnd, AvailablePrinters, PrinterDeviceName.
